rarer in these restless days, still resides there. But the McKinley home at Canton, so prominent in the last campaign of the lamented president, and the lawn, so vividly painted as being tramped out by the cheering visitors, has changed vastly and is now a children's hospital. Those who knew and sympathized with the bereaved Mrs. McKinley during her last sad days find comfort in knowing her home is now devoted to ailing little ones and to the alleviation of suffering in every form among the children of Canton. Mrs. Pomeroy believes in the destiny of Ohio as continuing to be the mother of Presidents. She calls attention to the fact that in the present body of law makers Ohio is likewise the mother of senators.

Both senators from the Buckeye state are native-born sons and this is not the general rule, as a glance through the Congressional Directory will show. Besides having her own two, Ohio the mother of three others now serving in the Senate. Reed of Missouri, Sterling of South Dakota and Norris of Nebraska. Mississippi shares the distinction of having three native sons serving in the Senate from other states, Chamberlain of Oregon, Gore of Oklahoma and Key Pittman of Nevada. But one senator from Mississippi, John Sharp Williams, was born in Tennessee, so this counts out one. Whether all this prophetic remains to be seen, but Ohioans are interested in a full-fledged boom on both sides of the political fence for a native son.

The trait of the renowned Isabel of Castile, which is so emphasized by all her biographers, that she ever loved her people is not so pronounced among the exalted femininity of the present day. The fact that Mrs. Miles Poundexter is such a skillful needlewoman and takes such delight in plain sewing makes her stand out among the women now focusing the lime-some butter and spices and set in an oven for about half an hour. The result is excellent. For the skin really contains the flavor. It looks well, too, the berries taking on the look of candied cherries, and this way is stamped with approval by all the culinary schools. But Mrs. Briggs and many of the fine homekeepers of the older section of the country believe Mr. Rogers a benefactor in keeping up the knowledge of the old ways, for they would certainly be forgotten in the newer ways now so widely heralded.

Army Notes.

Brig. Gen. E. H. Babbitt, U. S. A., left the city last week for Palm Beach, Fla., where he will spend the next two months, returning in the late spring to his apartment at the Highlands.

Mrs. Abbott Boone, wife of Maj. Boone, U. S. A., is making her home while in Washington at 2229 California street, where she will have with her in her apartment her mother, Mrs. Nellie D. Drexel.

Chaplain Cephas C. Bateman, U. S. A., arrived in Washington last week and is at 2909 G street for the length of his official business in this city.

Maj. Orva E. Beasley, U. S. A., who has been on overseas duty for some time, has sailed from France and upon his arrival in this country will come to Washington for duty in the office of director of finance.

Capt. William S. Parlier, U. S. A., arrived in Washington last week for duty in the office of the quartermaster general.

Capt. John C. Gibson, Jr., U. S. A., who has been on duty in Mesopotamia, has come to this country on leave, and is visiting his parents.

MRS. OSCAR R. LUHRING, wife of Representative Lühring of Indiana, who is at the Burlington for the season.

light. Mrs. Poundexter is rarely seen unless she is sewing. If a chance and intimate visitor happens in during the morning she will be shown to the sitting room to find her hostess surrounded by piles of mending—stockings, linen, household dand personal; even mysterious portions of the masculine wardrobe. She will chat vivaciously, her needle plunging in and out without a moment's lagging. In the matter of darning, Mrs. Poundexter is so famous that her friends do not hesitate to ask her aid in repairing rents in handsome silks or chiffons, and she can accomplish the task in a way to shame a professional. She rarely takes over fancy work, called, though she knitted indefatigably during the war. Mrs. Poundexter was Elizabeth Gale Page and comes from families well known in Virginia and Maryland and which also took a prominent part in upbuilding the National Capital. She has also a portion of the blood of the old Indian tribes which were in possession of the land when the Jamestown colony arrived. She is a diligent student of history and has the story of the Indians along the Potomac well in command. But Mrs. Poundexter has given her allegiance to the wonderful state of Washington, which is now her home.

She always has some of the fine apples from thereabout to offer a guest, and it is quite a grievance that the world at large hears eternally of Oregon apples and never a word of those from Washington, which she claims are better and which are now shipped to every portion of the habitable globe. She claims as great excellence for the roses of Washington as those more illustrious ones of Portland, for the Japanese current, which causes the beauty, fragrance and lasting bloom of the Oregon species, washes the shore and nourishes the flowers of Washington, too. Another rival industry between the states is that of the flax, planted by experts from Belfast during the war, with the hope of transferring some of the crowded linen manufacture from the eastern coast of Ireland to the vast domain of the Pacific coast. Locally the experiment should prosper for the same conditions hold in both cases. It may also be good news for the American homekeeper that linen of the same quality as the Belfast brands may be possible in a few years minus the high importing tariff.

Mrs. Frank H. Briggs, daughter of the late Senator William P. Frye of Maine, is a devout believer in New England cookery, and in her home at least the traditional ways of her people are not disregarded. Once a week Mrs. Briggs serves a genuine New England dinner, and happy is the guest who is invited to partake. There are the beans, the brown bread, the mackerel, the Indian meal pudding and many of the dishes which the late H. H. Rogers thought so highly of that he established a cooking school to teach them in Fairhaven, Mass. At least the thoughtless coming generation forget. After the traditional New England way, Mrs. Briggs makes cranberry jelly and not cranberry sauce, and she sends her berries and lets them stand for a few minutes before beginning the final boiling. Now the correct way, which is to save everything and not even to waste the skins, is to rinse in cold water, then barely cover with water to put in plenty of brown sugar and in Washington, has gone for station to Camp Gordon, Ga.

Lieut. Col. C. H. Lanza, U. S. A., now stationed at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., gave an unusually interesting lecture illustrated with lantern slides recently at Camp Funston, Kan., on "Artillery Intelligence in Battle." Col. Lanza, doubtless, inherits much of his talent as a lecturer from his literary mother, Marquise Clara Lanza, who, during the childhood of her sons, made her home in Washington with her father, the late Surgeon General Hammond, U. S. A. Marquise Lanza, like her father, wrote numerous entertaining novels, the scenes of several of which were set in this city.

Lieut. Col. H. J. McKenney, U. S. A., and family has taken possession of the attractive apartment recently leased at The Oakland, 2906 Columbia road.

Col. McKenney is on duty in this city in the office of the inspector general of the Army.
